A NEW SUGGESTION.

If the monied men of this city would get together and organize a company to develop the water power we have, this will not only be a paying investment, but it will be a great inducement for cotton factories to locate here. This will be the cheapest power for operating a factory which can be had except natural gas. The water power would be preferable to gas from the fact there would be no possibility of its giving out. It would do no harm to investigate the question and ascertain along this line what can be done. Water power is being developed in streams with no more falls than this. Of course the cost may be something greater, yet when once completed then the cost would cease. It would also furnish the cheapest possible electricity. This would be of great importance to outside investors. The water is here, then why not use it. Why sit around and wish things were thus and so. No results will come of it. Get busy and start the world talking. This will bring new visitors, and they seeing what is being done will naturally put their money in here. The more talk, the more prospect for getting something. This section of the State needs a copious quantity of rich and new blood. It can only be had by the proper efforts on the part of every citizen. No one should get in the way. Now is the time for something tangible to be done. Now is the time to get in the swim. The current is running rapidly. It is breaking on the capitalist, and especially those interested in the manufacture of cotton. They are beginning to realize that this proposition has for all time past been working backward, forcing water up the stream, as it were. A change is going on. The idea is spreading that is cheaper to haul the machinery to the cotton fields once than it is to haul the cotton to the machinery every year. This being a conclusive proposition why not be ready to ship some of this machinery here. If it should be demonstrated that it is both practical and feasible to develop a large horse power by utilizing the water, it would not be a very hard proposition to finance. Our home people must show their faith by their works. It is to be hoped that the matter will not be passed by as something which cannot be done simply because it has not been done.

If the Legislature intends to comply with the party demands they must include the Legislators. They are the boys the people are after, for they make the laws. It would be wrong to include the people and not themselves. The truth is, no passes should be given to anyone except actual employees. The same law should apply to sleeping cars. If the Legislators are such sticklers for the nominee of the party, the should show their consistency by passing the anti-pass law.

When Mr. Bryan arrives in Texas do not hesitate to offer him your hand, whether you did or did not pay your poll tax.—Dallas News.

It would not perhaps be strictly parliamentary to call attention to the investigation at Austin. It would perhaps be embarrassing to Mr. Bryan to "speak" on the political effects of the investigation on the honest Democracy of the country.

The Shreveport Times says Bailey of Texas will sell all his Kentucky race stock and borrow money in future on his check.

Mardi Gras, Ash Wednesday and St. Valentine's day were observed this week.

On Wednesday morning the rural route carriers at this place were informed of a raise in salary to $600, which will take effect July 1. Now, Mr. Farmer, if Uncle Sam appreciates this work in the manner of increasing the carrier's salary you should appreciate their service enough to put their roads in good shape over which they have to travel every day to accommodate you. What do you think about it?—Blue Ridge Record.

The subscription lists of the newspapers published in Texas will show that about twice as many people are now taking the papers as were taking them before the rural routes were established. The town people would be astonished to know of the number of people who take the daily papers and the weekly papers. Now it is known to all men that when a person commences to read the papers for the news that is in them he will not cease doing it if he has to go to town every day to read them. The rural route has been the cause of increase. The farmers, now reading more than they ever did, are not going to cease. The rural routes will be maintained. The Government knows this. Hence, it has only to threaten the farmers with suspending their routes, and at once they will get their routes and commence to work on their roads. In Hunt county, which was threatened, the people became excited, and at once commenced to save the routes by improving the roads. They are raising money by subscription in different localities, and with it buying road machinery and draft animals, and the work is done by volunteers. This means that they are aroused to the importance of good roads, and that they will be a feature of the greatness of Texas in the next ten years. The subject should not be dismissed without giving credit to Uncle Sam, who has forced the people to undertake it in their own interests.—Dallas News.

The rural route is one of the best laws that has been passed in years. The country is indebted to the Hon. Thos. E. Watson of Georgia for the best educating proposition yet given to the people. Nothing makes a man feel so independent as to be able to keep in close touch with the happenings of the day. It creates a thirst for information. Every farmer who takes a paper, and nearly all do that, look forward to the coming of the mail riders with great interest and anxiety. The people of Marion county should keep the roads in good repair if for no other purpose than to give the rural route men good roads over which to travel. Each neighborhood should pride itself on having good roads. When you do this you benefit yourself more than any one else. It is the best paying investment you can make. Don't feel that it is the other fellow who is being benefited. It is you.

There is the very closest friendship between the two Alabama Senators, Pettus and Morgan, and they hail from the same town, which is also odd. They are the two oldest men in the United States Senate, and Senator Morgan is one of the oldest in point of service also. In the absence of Senator Morgan the other day, during the discussion of the salary-increase bill, his venerable colleague, Gen. Pettus, who supported the measure, paid a simple but eloquent tribute to him. He pointed to Senator Morgan as an example of the need of higher compensation for the National lawmakers, reciting briefly the hard work done by his colleague in his 39 years' devotion to the public service. "My colleague," said Senator Pettus, in a voice trembling with emotion, "could have amassed a fortune at the bar had he preferred that to serving the people and the country. I have known him 50 years. We have lived as friends and neighbors for that length of time in the same village. He was making $15,000 a year when he came to the Senate. You all know how hard he has worked here, and that he had no time to earn money. His financial condition is now just about the same when he entered the Senate 30 years ago. The people of Alabama love him, he is poor, and they are proud of him for it."—National Tribune.

The foregoing represents the true Southern statesman of which the South has been so justly proud. It is an example which it is to be hoped the younger statesman of the South will imitate.

The Kansas City Star has a whole sermon in this: "In charging a Georgia federal grand jury to seek out and punish illicit distillers, a Southern judge said that it is whiskey which is responsible for the savagery of worthless tramps and negroes who commit unnumbered atrocities. He might have further said that whiskey is a curse to all classes of society. While in men of a lower order of intelligence it develops the ferocity of beasts it is only those of strong will and intellect who are not more or less animal and brutal under its influence. It is never a help to any class of society. Men will have to attain a higher level of civilization than is yet in sight to rise above the vitating influence of whiskey."

Country Newspaper Advertising.

Many merchants do not advertise their business sufficiently because they think of the cost of newspaper space, never stopping to consider that newspaper space properly used is an interest-paying investment. Many a times a merchant will crowd a full page ad to a quarter page space, thinking that he is saving money by so doing. On the contrary, he is cheating himself and he will find that instead of saving money he is producing a loss in his business. People like to read large, well displayed ads, and they hesitate a long time about reading condensed or crowded ads poorly displayed. The value of a page ad in a newspaper varies according to the territory in which the paper is published and the circulation it has, both as to quantity and quality.

The trouble with the majority of country editors is not that they ask too much for their space, but that they ask too little. Newspaper space is usually worth every cent that the newspaper man asks for it, and as a rule it is worth more. When the editor of the local paper asks a merchant for an ad he must remember several things in placing it. First, that the local editor is the best thing the town possesses, even if he is the most abused. The local is the official booster, self-appointed, for the town, its inhabitants, and that notwithstanding the fact that the editor has to take out his subscription in carrels and his advertising in trade, he is doing a great work and is entitled to the highest possible consideration and respect. The merchant must figure that when he places his ad he gets the benefit of the boosters that the editor gives the town and himself as well as interest the rest of the paper arouses in the minds of the readers. The value of the ad doesn't lie wholly in the ad itself, it lies in the whole paper and the amount of interest that the paper can arouse in anything is the thermometer which should decide the price for advertising space and which should guide the merchant in placing his copy. The newspaper is a continuous ad for the merchant and town all the time, whether the merchant pays anything or not, and there are very few merchants in this country who really want something for nothing; most of them are good sports enough to want to pay for what they get.

The only way that the editor gets any pay for his work is the profit he derives from his actual paid advertisements inserted by the local merchants. A town with a good live newspaper is always a better town in every way than one which lacks it. It is a better town to live in, a better town to buy in and a better town to advertise in. The paper does more for the town than anything else. It is the medium of intercourse between the inhabitants and the surrounding country. It is the medium through which the people express their views and get the views of others as well as the means by which they keep in touch with the outside world. Without the local paper the average country town would be an isolated and deserted place. The local paper is an educator. Every Saturday or Monday, or whatever day it is printed, it carries to the readers all the news of the world and matters they would otherwise never hear about. The newspaper is the one bulwark of American freedom which has not been robbed by the trusts and which still waves the flag of freedom free and untrammelled and it is the only real preserver of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness that exists for the American people. Therefore the local newspaper should receive the hearty support of every merchant and be well patronized by all. It not only serves in all the capacities enumerated above, but it is the real, logical means of bringing the advantages that the local merchants present to the notice of the readers. The local paper is what keeps the people coming to the store and to the town. The local paper is the general store of the town in the most literal sense of the word. It is the medium through which the local newspaper man asks for his white space, it is none too much. It is worth every cent he requires and you should gladly pay the price and pay it often. Do not let the chances that the local newspaper presents to you go by unnoticed. Take advantage of it and make it make money for you. Remember also that the newspaper man is a business man. He understands his business as well as you understand yours, and he understands his business better than anybody else does. He knows how to run his better than any one else in the universe if he is of the right kind, and when you ask him for advertising rates or when he tells you whether you want to hear or not, remember it is a business proposition and that he knows how that paper should be run and nine times out of ten he will run it that way if given a chance. Just because you happen to advertise with him, do not expect him to give you half the paper in free readers and boosters. Do not think that just because you spend some money with him that you can tell him how to run the paper. You can't. The writer has been there himself. Get behind the editor and push. Help him and he will help you. Spend a dollar with him and he will return you five. The "get together" spirit can be worked to as good advantage nowhere better than between the local merchant and the local editor.—Wesley A. Stan ger Western Publisher.

C. O. D. Bill Signed.
Austin, Tex., Feb. 12.—The Governor today signed the C. O. D. bill placing a tax of $5,000 upon express companies for each C. O. D. office maintained in the state. The signature makes the bill a law and it is thought that it will effectually do away with the C. O. D. evil. The bill was framed by Mr. Thompson to prevent the practice which has existed of sending C. O. D. shipments into prohibition sections, allowing the express agent to deliver them to anyone without identification, upon payment of the charges.

Those Manhattan Cars.
Henry Thomas, a well known merchant of Hampden county, tells this story of his first trip to New York:
"I had reached the city at night, and after asking numerous questions had reached the Astor house, where I was to stay.
"Next morning I went out on the street to take a car up town to attend to my business, but as the cars were merely marked 'Broadway,' I could not tell which were going up and which down town. Not caring to ask any questions, I boarded one of the empty cars, which I guessed was going up. After I had gone a few blocks I doubted my judgment, and so asked the conductor which way we were going.
"Up town, of course, can't you see which end of the car the horses are on?" he answered; and, turning to the driver he remarked: "See, but some people ask foolish questions."

A Pleasant Dance.
On the evening of Friday, February 8th, Mr. and Mrs. Edd Dorgan, four miles west of Laster, gave a dance in honor of their daughter, Nona and Miss Willie Walden of Jefferson. The merry crowd enjoyed themselves chatting until the hour of nine came, when the beautiful music started and the dance began. The glimmer of sweet and beautiful maidens and gallant and happy young men formed a throng of beauty and chivalry made up from the flowers of the social sphere of Laster and other places. The hour of 12:30 came when the hostess cleared the way, and all followed to the dining room which was beautifully decorated with evergreens, and delicious refreshments were served. After returning to the dancing room, the music started and all enjoyed dancing until 3:30 when all left, thanking them for the pleasure of the evening as one long to be remembered, and with the wish for another such occasion to come in the near future. This is not the first occasion we have been royally entertained at the pleasant home where the host and hostess know how to make the young people have a good time.

He had 20 days' wages to pay for. 20 instead of 10. Fooled $30 in pay.
He got a poor job besides. He paid too much for his eggs, and they hatched woodpeckers.
